BY CLINKSCALES & LANGSTON.

ANDERSON, S. C., WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1898.

VOLUME XXXIV---NO. 11.

We have thought over this announcement, then penned it, then examined it, then amended it. Without preface or digression we proceed to recite the features of the movement:

All our STRAW and CRASH HATS will from now on be sold at one-half price:

> 50c. Straw and Crash Hats now 25c. 75c. Straw Hats now $1.00 Straw Hats now $1.25 Straw Hats now

All our SUMMER UNDERWEAR will be sold at CUT PRICES.

All our NEGLIGEE SHIRTS have been greatly reduced in price.

It will not be wise for you to dally. Crowds of frugal and thrifty men will quickly respond, and it's best for you to get into their ranks.

Your money back if you want it.

"By the way, what do you think of the dispensary law, anyhow?"

"Well, as you know, I am a Prohibitionist from principle. To start with, the dispensary law is wrong in principle, and ought never to have been enacted. But I am opposed to it mainly on the ground that it sells whiskey to the people as a beverage and debauches our citizens.'

know what good it would do to elect | would like to see it enforced by men you Governor with a dispensary Legislature. Would you mind giving your views along this line?'

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Jonathan Hayseed was a well-to-do farmer who lived at home, and was content to pursue the noiseless tenor of his way, surrounded by his happy family. When he came to town, his trade was largely sought after, (as is that of every other man's,) and the mean, petty methods employed by unprincipled tradesmen to secure his trade by appealing to his vanity overcome by might the upright means of the less smart. Mr. Hayseed, it was noticed by these sharks, was a well-fed man, consequently corpulent, kept his beard trimmed and combed, wore his hair long, talked coarse and looked wise. These being the principal requirements for a man filling a public trust, according to an ancient though not altogether extinct idea, he was urged to run for an important office. The suggestion, while quite flattering, almost stunned him, for he said: "No. no, I couldn't afford to stop my business for any office now. I'm too busy. I appreciate your suggestion, but (ha, ha,) really I don't think I-(ah)-could afford it." "But," urged the tempter, "you must remember you are a citizen and must obey the people's call; you must be patriotic enough to make some sacrifices for your country; besides, don't let the offices go to such fellows as Hoppergrass, who are too lazy to make a living at anything else." This clinched the bargain. He spit and looked at the floor right hard and then spit again: "Oh, I wouldn't mind taking it so much, but it don't exactly suit me right now," squinted his eyes, sat on the small of his back and looked way off. The tempter pursued his game knowing he had him checkmated. "If the people call you out you won't refuse, will you?" "No," he replied, looking very serious, but laughing plum down in his stomach. "I couldn't refuse if they want me, but I'd heap rather not (ha-ha-a-a.") Hayseed starts home, speaks to everybody, and like the new-made groom, thinks everybody loves him and he loves everybody. Even his old mare feels the change that has come over the spirit of his dreams. That night, after supper, he calls his wife tenderly and says: "Molly, I guess you'd better begin to pack up and let's move to town. I'm going to run for -They've been after me so much about it, I don't see how I can get out of it."

we'd better stay." But the next day she tells him she's studied it over and is willing to move to town. That much is settled. Mr. Hayseed blossoms out into a Sunday School lecturer and sings very loud in the choir. He loves to go to Church and will ride a long ways, nearly to the neighboring County, to hear a good sermon or any other kind, and when the contribution box comes round he slips (?) a dollar in and looks pious.

"Who's been after you, Jonathan?" "Aw, I don't know, several." "Well, I just can't do it. I don't want to move to town; we're fixed up here now and

The day after the election he comes to town to hear how the other fellows come out. In counting the votes, his name seems to him as silent as the letter "g" in the word "gnat," and he gets disgusted with the whole proceeding, hitches up his mare, lights his last cigar and says, "Whoa, darn you, can't you stand still?" On the way home he actually thinks, and thinks out loud, "D-n it to h-l, I don't give a d-n. I'm d-n glad of it. I didn't want it,

On the piazza, his wife waits for him to get in hailing distance from over the long rocky hill leading down to the house." (Silence) "What's the news from the election?" Whoa, hold up your head." "What's the news from the election, I say?" "Whoa, you old sistent inquirer's voice. This time she was by his side and asked: "Well, Jonathan, how's the election ?" "Aw, I don't know. Snooks is first, Snyder second, and I come in there somewhere, but that don't make any difference; I can't take it, nohow. We couldn't move, and it don't suit my business, so I just come home and left it there with 'em." And then he took a big chew of tobacco and didn't say anything till EX-CANDIDATE. next week.

Recruits Wanted for the Army

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1-The war department has decided to establish a recruiting station for the regular army at every camp where volunteer regiments are to be mustered out. This action will be taken with the view of recruiting regulars up to the maximum strength allowed by law and to give the volunteers who may wish to continue in the service the preference in recruiting. It is estimated by the war department authorities that about 4,-000 or 5,000 men will be required to fill up the regular regiments, that number of vacancies being likely to exist in the near future on account of deaths, disabilities, and the withdrawal of men under the privilege allowing new regular recruits to leave the service at the end of the war. The army adminiscially able to carry out any obligations made by their firm.
